ASK THAW'S REMOVAL TO MATTEAWAN

Sheriff of Dutchess County Jail Says Prisoner Ought to Be in Asylum.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Sept. 3.—Hearing his action on the part of the State Prison Commission, Sheriff Chamberlain of Dutchess County made application to Justice Monaghan in the Supreme Court today to have Harry K. Thaw removed from the Dutchess County jail and placed in the Matteawan Insane Asylum.

Sheriff Chamberlain declares Thaw's presence detrimental to jail discipline and contrary to law and asked the Court to order his immediate removal.

"As Thaw has been pronounced insane," said a representative of the sheriff's office, "he ought to be in an insane asylum. Our jail is crowded to its capacity and we have no time or room to take care of prisoners who do not belong to us."

"Furthermore, his exact standing here under the circumstances cannot be determined and his presence here under those circumstances has had effect on the morale of the prison."

The Man of a Hundred Masks

A Story of Love and Mystery—By Hazen Lynch

CHAPTER VI.—CONTINUED.

"I know all that," said the blonde George Bessie. "Tell me."

"Oh, no, I don't once bit in the wrist," she looked down at that fragile member, "and my blonde hair, but I'll make a bargain with you."

"Will you, now?" That's kind."

A hand fell on Bessie's shoulder, a black-haired hand.

"Pardon me for interrupting," said Zerk, "but you must forget our present quarrel, and be seated at the desk. It looks a quarter to three."

"Oh, you go to—oh, it's you, Zerk. I am present just in time. Miss Mildred Alster—Bessie's cousin—Zerk."

"I don't care," said the young lady in her romantic poet manner, and he led of the black hand bowed once and turned the black walking away.

"Your friends? He, anyone?"

"No, it's all down, George Bessie, and let's finish our friendly conversation. I tell you I can't. Miss I must go."

"Now, don't make more of a fool of yourself than you can help. I'll see you to—"

morning, or the next day, any time you wish, but I must go now."

"Ah," said Miss von Alster, significantly. "Well, see—"

"The unimportant nothing but head and getting up. You get caught out of the day—sure. Help me with my things. I'll see you to the door, and George Bessie will see you to the door, and George Bessie will see you to the door."

"I'll see you to the door about five," he said. "Good night."

"Good night," she said.

He got into an electric hansom himself and was taken rapidly down town. He dismissed the cab at Grand street and the Bessie and walked west and then into Matt street.

He stepped before the window of a little shop on the corner, and looking out, he saw the blonde Bessie standing there, looking at the window. He saw her looking at the window, and he saw her looking at the window.

There was the archway of a man's. A candle was lit, and the light was on the wall. The man was looking at the window, and he saw the blonde Bessie standing there, looking at the window.
